

At the beginning of July of this year, there appeared at the Dutchman MOUTON's print shop, a very secretive visitor who appeared to be well informed about the preparation of the Russian edition of Dr. Zhivago. MOUTON's sales director, Peter de RIDDER, asked the visitor to be patient until he could get together with PELTRINELLI and could begin the preparation. The unknown individual reached in his briefcase and wordlessly exhibited the negatives of the complete photostatic copy of Dr. Zhivago which obviously originated from an illegal Russian edition from behind the Iron Curtain. The Dutchman wasn't too sure if it would be in the interests of the MOUTON firm and that of PELTRINELLI to accept this edition, but one had to think of the possibility of another printer being found who didn't have to worry about this. RIDDER accepted the edition without the directors of the international syndicate knowing about it. RIDDER tried to reach PELTRINELLI by telephone in order to legalize the printing at the last minute.

The individual in the Brussels Vatican pavilion who talked with the Soviet tourists was not unknown to PASTERNAK. He was called Vladimir Graf TOLSTOI, a grand nephew of Count Leo Nikolayevich TOLSTOI and had visited PASTERNAK at the end of July in his village near Moscow. Leo N. TOLSTOI was very friendly with PASTERNAK's father, the painter Leonid PASTERNAK, while Boris PASTERNAK was serving in a literary capacity in the Soviet system. TOLSTOI immigrated to America. He became a professor at the Jesuit University at Georgetown in Washington, D.C., and entered the service of the Militant American Cultural and Propaganda Organization which goes under the name of Committee for a Free Europe. From the coffers of this Committee, TOLSTOI's nephew Vladimir, financed the printing of the Russian edition of Dr. Zhivago.

With all the fuss about ENIVAGO, mystery has arisen and most of the answers remain to be found in the Netherlands and the Hague in particular. According to KENDOUT, Soviet visitors to the exposition were given free copies in Vatican pavilion in which PELTRINELLI, who has book rights, appeared as publisher although he had not placed an order for printing of Russian edition. These copies originated from

Memorandum For: Director of Central Intelligence

Subject : Article in the National Review Bulletin of 15 November 1958 Concerning the Book "Dr. Zhivago"

1. This memorandum is for information only.

2. on 15 November 1958 the National Review Bulletin carried an article on the publication of the book "Dr. Zhivago" asserting that CIA was responsible for the Dutch publication of the book. An extract of this article as it appeared in the National Review Bulletin is set forth as Attachment "A".

3. A source of this office has advised that Ralph De Toledano wrote the article which appeared in the National Review Bulletin. De Toledano, author of "Spies, Dupes and Diplomats," is a member of the extreme right wing element and was a close associate of Senator McCarthy. De Toledano entered on duty with OSS in December 1944, but was terminated in February 1945

4. Considerable material has appeared in the European press concerning the publication of "Dr. Zhivago." Attachment "C" contains a summary of material which has appeared in Der Speigel, issue of 29 October 1958, in the Paris Hatch, and in the Dutch publications Haagsch Dagblat and Het Binnenhof. The Der Speigel article asserted that Vladimir Graf Tolstoy, the grandnephew of Count Leo Nikolyevich Tolstoy, financed the printing of the Russian edition of "Dr. Zhivago" from funds of the Committee for Free Europe. The article went on to assert that Vladimir Tolstoy had visited Boris Pasternak, the author of "Dr. Zhivago," in July in Russia.

5. The editors of the National Review and the National Review Bulletin have had numerous articles in the past charging that the Committee for Free Europe and Radio Free Europe are CIA sponsored and financed. It is possible that Ralph De Toledano, as part of the basis for his assertion in the 15 November 1958 article that "Dr. Zhivago" was published through the work of CIA, used some of the material described above. It is a well-known fact that the various editors and contributors to the National Review and National Review Bulletin follow closely material appearing in the Western European press.

6. Further work is being done on this matter, and you will be advised of the results of this further investigation.

illegal source which proved to be MOUTON acting in complete ignorance. FELTRINELLI and MOUTON have now made contract for the new Russian edition of the book. EXHIBIT claims FELTRINELLI wrote him on 1 July asking about sending him photocopy of book. Several days later DE RIDDER received telephone call from contact in Paris who told him he was bringing manuscript. DE RIDDER accepted delivery of book on assumption that the person from Paris was sent by FELTRINELLI. Weeks later DE RIDDER received visit from VAN DER BEEK who ordered 1,000 copies, obviously aware that MOUTON was printing Russian edition for FELTRINELLI. It was impossible to fill his order within month as requested. To DE RIDDER's stupefaction, BEEK took printing plates out of his briefcase. To the best of our knowledge no Russian edition was ever published and we tried to contact FELTRINELLI to inform him of this startling visit but he was not available. In order to preserve FELTRINELLI's rights, we are now reproducing the book photographically in order to prevent book from going to another publisher. 1,100 copies were given to BEEK who did not tell for whom the books were intended. DE RIDDER heard then that the books were distributed in the Vatican Pavilion. But until then he had been unaware involved in political affair. Afterwards learned that Paris manuscript was not identical with FELTRINELLI manuscript, but BEEK's photocopy was quite similar to FELTRINELLI's. FELTRINELLI seemed to find no objection to Hague illegal edition. Agreement reached between FELTRINELLI and EXHIBIT, Italian showed understanding for MOUTON action but mystery remains. Where is FELTRINELLI's photocopy which was sent by post to Hague?

Second Article in Maagach Publishing

We had an interview with FELTRINELLI who is the Italian publisher and main character in the pirate edition of J.R. Shivers. FELTRINELLI said: "I am considering bringing action against VAN DER BEEK who is responsible for the pirate publication. My intention now is to publish the book through MOUTON, that is I will publish and distribute, MOUTON will do the setting and printing, nothing more. Each order must have my consent. The printing will amount to 5,000 copies. I think the book will be on the market on 1 December." It is known that FELTRINELLI did not wish to publish the book in Russian this spring and that he sabotaged negotiations with MOUTON. FELTRINELLI is known to be Communist. He denied any sabotage of publication stating: "Your compatriots did not come up fast enough with detailed estimates of expenses." We asked FELTRINELLI if he was a Communist. "I am not a member of the Communist Party" he said. "I am not asking you that." "Then I cannot answer your question", he said dryly. He described MOUTON's handling of illegal publication as stupid and wild west like.

Second Article in Maagach Publishing

During the first week of September several hundred copies of Pa-

Zhirkov were offered free to Russian tourists in Vatican Pavilion at the exposition. They were part of 1,160 copies printed at the Hague. They were the only copies printed in Russian in the world. According to some reports, copies of these books are being passed from hand to hand in Moscow and Leningrad.

Hot Potato

A series of wildcat developments surrounded the Russian printing of the "Martyr" from which it results that KUHN has published illegal and will publish legal edition. On 1 November a contract was signed for the printing of a legal edition. KENDOUT explained the story because of misleading accounts in which he, Long or Lege imputed participation in political affairs. KENDOUT said they were involved in politics without knowing it. Someone came from Paris to bring the manuscript which KENDOUT thought was from PELTRINELLI, but later learned this was not the case. Motives of the Frenchman is not clear to this day. In dealing with KUHN, KENDOUT did not know his relationship with Lege or Vrijheid, an anti-Communist organization, which seems to have distributed the book to Russian visitors at the Vatican Pavilion. PELTRINELLI was in the Hague on 1 November and KENDOUT assured him that printing expenses will be born by KUHN only and they are attempting to turn the illegal printing into a legal one. Everything turned out all right and contract was signed for 5,000 copies in October. PELTRINELLI wants the first edition continued to be considered as illegal. Paris manuscript differs from PELTRINELLI's only slightly. KUHN's copies are similar to PELTRINELLI's with exception of typographical errors and some rules left out. But who had the manuscript printed and not published? PELTRINELLI sent the manuscript unregistered but KENDOUT did not get it. Where is it? How did the Frenchmen and KUHN get the text since PELTRINELLI says he did not provide them with it?

Articles Appearing in the Radical Issue of 29 October 1958 about
Dr. Zhivago

The article started off by mentioning Soviet tourists who have for several months been visiting the Brussels World Fair and have been in the last few weeks visiting an exhibit of the Vatican which is of particular interest. The Soviet visitors had been interested not so much in the Vatican Church or in the Vatican pavilion, which is called the "Church of the Still" which the Catholic clerics have designated as the clergy in the countries behind the Iron Curtain. The Soviet citizens have gone much more to the pavilion-helpers which they have made plain through words and gestures, but they had come with some mutual reservations. They are in such cases directed after a few discreet steps to the Vatican's Information Office for the Church of the eastern areas and they were greeted by a Slovenian priest who spoke with them awhile in the Russian language. The Soviet guests left with a book under their arm which was given to them as a gift, and this book was not the Bible, but a novel, a Russian edition of the Dr. Zhivago by Boris PASTERNAK which is forbidden in the Soviet Union.

The author was given the Nobel Prize for Literature last Thursday by the Swedish Academy. The sixty-eight year old writer, PASTERNAK, who lives in a villa somewhere near Moscow, wrote Dr. Zhivago over a period of ten years.

The New Yorker Zeitung stated that the book was a very good Russian novel of freedom. It is the only fully free and completely non-censored edition of a Russian's concept of this epic and it is the only worthwhile writing of all the Soviet literature of this year. The book tells the story of a middle-class intellectual, Dr. Yuryi Andreyevich ZHIVAGO, who has maintained an independent critical outlook on the events in Russia from the October Revolution of 1917 to the Stalinist Terror and has changed it happily.

PASTERNAK gave a copy of his manuscript to the Director of the Mailander Firm, Dr. Giangiacomo MELTRINELLI, and gave him the right for publishing the book in Western countries. After a period of several months, there appeared in the Mailander Company the Italian; from Gallimard in Paris, the French; and from COLLINS and NAVILLE Press in London, the English edition of Dr. Zhivago. At the same time, the German edition appeared in August of this year. Also, the Russian version of Slavic text, the printer and publisher KOUTON in the Hague.

"At Home"

Washington

"That quaint workshop of amateur subversion, the Central Intelligence Agency, may be exorbitantly expensive -- but from time to time it produces some noteworthy goodies. This summer, for instance, CIA forgot its feuds with some of our allies and turned on our enemies -- and gullible dictators succeeded most nobly.

The Russian text of Boris Pasternak's novel, MATRICHKA, was recently turned over to a Dutch publisher. Copies, a thousand copies of the book, were then quietly shipped to the Russian embassy at the Principe di Savoia, and there handed out free to visiting Soviet citizens. In Moscow, young Soviets were passed from hand to hand as yet another copy of MATRICHKA in a colleague dormitory. The Kremlin, through its ambassador in Italy, protested bitterly to Feltrinelli, who "owns" rights to MATRICHKA (1947) -- and last week a suit was filed against the Dutch publisher to force him to cease and desist. But the damage had been done, and the award of a Nobel Prize to Mr. Pasternak was the icing on a cake which Comintern's Gorbushchev has had some difficulty in digesting.

Soviet discomfiture over Pasternak was visited on a small scale here upon the UNRRA. UNRRA framed editorially on the gullible good friend, Mr. Cyrus Eaton. To the dismay of the Let's-go-to-the-hamsters crowd for the nation's capital, the UNRRA took up the hammer and certain words spoken by Mr. Eaton before a large audience of the National Press Club. The aged industrialist went far beyond UNRRA's demands for unilateral trade disengagement, recognition of Red China, and other forms of appeasement. The UNRRA's PUSC considers tender solicitude for American interests a form of prickling "propaganda misconceptions."

Mr. Eaton, however, found it in his over-zeal that heart to justify the Soviet massacre of Hungary, to defend Nikita Gorbushchev as a man with abounding love for the United States, and to "justify" the treatment of Mr. Pasternak by the Communists as a demonstration of overzealous patriotism among the Soviet younger generation. The UNRRA's PUSC, hardly blushing, remarked: "Some of Mr. Eaton's uncritical observations sound embarrassingly like those of Henry Wallace during his period of toroised gullibility about Russia." How true, said the pot to the kettle.
